Master Chef Ahmad Maadarani is the General President and Founder of an international institutional framework dedicated to culinary arts, professional judging, and advanced specialized education. His leadership vision is rooted in viewing cooking as an integrated cognitive and ethical practice rather than a purely technical or skill-based activity. He has played a central role in developing reference frameworks that regulate professional practice in cooking, evaluation, and judging through scientific knowledge, professional integrity, and human responsibility.

Over the years, he has led the establishment of structured educational and adjudication systems based on clear standards, contributing to the advancement of concepts that link food science, sensory perception, and professional ethics. He oversees accreditation processes, professional standards development, and organizational governance to ensure institutional sustainability and international credibility.

Known for his analytical and non-promotional approach, he prioritizes institutional legitimacy, regulatory clarity, and long-term impact. His professional mission focuses on safeguarding the culinary profession from inconsistency and superficial practices, while positioning cooking as a conscious human act with lasting cultural, health, and social significance.
